You may have experienced a strong body contraction when you are falling asleep. Sometimes, you are even dreaming of falling down at the same time. It is called a hypnic jerk, or a sleep start. An estimated 70% of adults twitch during the __41__ from wakefulness to sleep. The strength of the jerks varies—some do not cause any discomfort, while others might __42__ people awake. Strong jerks often come with hallucinations, a falling sensation, increased heart rate, rapid breathing, and even insomnia.

Researchers have not found the exact cause of hypnic jerks yet. Some claim that the nerves in the limbs send incorrect signals. Others __43__ it by suggesting that the brain misinterprets the relaxing muscles as encountering some danger, so it signals the muscles to twitch. Despite different hypotheses, they agree that sleep deprivation, fatigue, stress and anxiety, intense exercise, and brain stimulants may trigger a sleep start.

Hypnic jerks are generally considered a natural, harmless process of falling asleep. As long as people practice sleep __44__, they can reduce the frequency. First, it is highly recommended to ditch stimulants. Second, as anxiety and stress cause sleep disorders, people should perform guided meditations or breathing exercises to __45__ the problem. Third, keeping a regular sleep schedule with enough sleep hours is of significant importance. Hypnic jerks do not require medical attention. They are just reminding people to relax and take a full rest.

(A) hygiene	(B) startle	(C) tackle	(D) transition	(E) refute
