When I was a freshman in high school, I struggled with math. The numbers never appeared to make sense in my mind, and every test felt like a battle I was going to lose. Two months into my first year in high school, I was faced with Polynomial Function, a subject that seemed to __41__ logical reasoning to me. I remember staring blankly at the equations and feeling a knot of __42__ tighten in my chest.

My first reaction was to believe that I simply wasn't "good at math." I had this belief that either I had the talent or I didn't, and it seemed I was out of luck. But then, something changed after my math teacher, Ms. Chang, had a hearty conversation with me. She told me that the belief I held was called "a fixed mindset." It would stop me from embracing challenges and making improvements. Instead, she encouraged me to try "a growth mindset," where I could view challenges as opportunities for growth rather than __43__ of my limitations." She said, "Each question you solve and each concept you master is a small victory that adds up to make you a better learner."

I decided to __44__ this new attitude. Instead of giving up after each mistake, I started to approach problems with __45__, wondering how far I could get and how strong I could become. I asked more questions, sought help from my classmates, and spent extra hours practicing at home. By the end of the semester, I had not only improved my math skills but also learned a valuable lesson about resilience and growth.

(A) adopt	(B) curiosity	(C) contradict
(D) evidence	(E) frustration	(F) monitor

In an era of exploration and conquest, the world seemed full of promise for those daring enough to seek its hidden treasures. In the early 19th century, a fleet of ships set sail on a dangerous __46__ across uncharted waters. Their mission was to uncover a remote cemetery that had long been forgotten by the world. The __47__ for the crew was great—wealth and fame awaited those who succeeded. However, they could not foresee the challenges that lay ahead.

As they ventured deeper into the ocean, the weather turned violent. The waves rose like mountains and the winds howled like beasts. The __48__ of nature's fury took hold, battering the ships with powerful winds and rain that seemed to come from all directions. Their supplies, once securely stowed, were swept away by the crashing waves. Driven by a deep-seated __49__ that their journey would not be in vain, the crew pressed on through the storm.

Eventually, the fleet reached a remote island. There, they discovered a natural corridor leading to what appeared to be a hidden valley. But the island was no paradise. The explorers were met with a fierce __50__ from the native inhabitants, forcing them to retreat. Many died in the conflict, and those that survived were scarred and disheartened. They were forced to abandon their quest and sail back to their homeland, carrying with them only the heavy burden of their lost companions and shattered dreams.

(A) conviction	(B) incentive	(C) expedition
(D) assault	(E) compliance	(F) grip
